1 Down 3 To Go

True Temper remain on course to take the Grand Slam in 2010. After one of the most exciting Masters Tournaments in years, the victor claimed his 3rd Green jacket aided by the ever popular Project X shafts in his irons. With some stunning approach shots, including the eagle on 14 when he holed out from the fairway. Then on Sunday with potentially, shot of the year on 13, he set himself up for a very strong finish to take 1st place by 3 shots.

Less Fairways Less Greens?

David McCarthy, True Temper's European Director, questions whether the new groove alterations have changed the way the top players approach the game. Do these stats help us towards an answer?

Player	Green in Reg Rank	Fairways Hit Rank
Phil Mickleson	5th	45th
Lee westwood	1st	43rd
Anthony Kim	10th	46th
Tiger Woods	17th	38th
KJ Choi	4th	24th
Fred Couples	15th	12th
Nick Watney	2nd	23rd
Y.E. Yang	19th	25th
Hunter Mahen	3rd	17th
Ricky Barnes	13th	44th

Part of the new groove rule was to put emphasis on hitting fairways? yet this has not prevented the top 10 players at the Masters 2010 from being low in the Fairways Hit rankings, yet high on the Greens in Reg ranking. Also worth noting, the week before Anthony Kim came last in Fairways Hit at Houston but still wins the event! Are we missing something?
